WACO TRIBUNE-HERALD

By popular demand

Based on the commotion, one might call Nobody's Fool controversial. It shouldn't be.

It exists because of demand. A lot of parents want their children to have accurate sex education and frank discussions about peer pressure and choices. Some 8,000 children have participated over 16 years — last year about 400, grades five through nine.

They'll have that opportunity again Wednesday in this year's conference at the Waco Convention Center. Tuesday night is a parent preview.

Though created by Planned Parenthood, the event is a collaboration of many agencies interested in getting children to make healthy and safe choices. Key, of course, is the interest — the market demand — of parents who share the same concern.
